To bite a pearl is to test its authenticity, to feel the gritty texture of something real, or the smooth plastic of a simulation. This collection, PEARL BITER is my love letter to misspent youth, poor time-keeping and disobedient women. It celebrates the gaze of self regard, playing dress up for oneself and being and doing the inappropriate.

I am conjuring the feral and imperfect muse that is in all of us when we give it voice. This is a collection that whispers past lives and half truths, boastful grandeur and everyday vices.

Through reformulating found objects and pre-existing garments into new articles of fascination I am creating a grubby fantasy of faded disregard transformed into nascent glory.
These clothes intend to show their working and are all the richer for it.

From the sheepish pixie to the metal clad warrior, the coat-check girl to the painter, this collection of threads and pearls is an evocation of childish pleasures made adult, treating the serious things with levity and the lighter things with great attention. My subject is not any specific woman, but each one of their own kind. It always starts with the object in my hand and I build a universe from it.

This collection is self-consciously geared toward the half light of dingy bars and nighttime exploits, it shimmers momentarily, glinting in candle light and dreading the dawn.
